NUMB. 1526

SATURDAY, MAY 10. 1740.

№ 1524.

May 7. 1740.

IT is come to that paſs with the Author of the Craftſman that he is equally diſbeliev'd whether he praiſes or diſpraiſes; and I am apt to believe he thinks ſo himſelf, or he never would venture, as he does in his Journal of the 26th of laſt Month, to cry up the Politicks and Honeſty of his Patrons now reſiding in France. The Conduct of that quondam Miniſter was ſo variable and extravagant whilſt he was in Power, and his Diſingenuity ſo notorious whilſt he was in Exile, that it's morally impoſſible for this Writer, vain and ſanguine as he is, to hope that his Encomium on his diſtant Patron's Politicks and Honeſty would not be taken for Satyr; or that his Diſpraiſe of a Miniſter now in Power, would not be taken for an Encomium, when in the ſame Paragraph he draws a Parallel between the Characters of both.

The Peace of Utrecht, the unhappy Fate of the poor deluded Catalans, the Diſgrace and Exile of the Duke of Marlborough, the Schiſm Act, the Attempt upon the Liberty of the Preſs, the Diſreſpect to his Majeſty whilſt only Electoral Prince of Hanover, the Attempts in a thouſand Shapes to defeat the Act of Settlement, the Rebellion in 1715, the Seals received from the Hands of the Pretender, the Fidelity in that Treaſonable Service, the Diſcontent and Diſloyalty endeavour'd to be inſtill'd in the Minds of the Subject ſince his Pardon, and the other Et Cæteras with which a Volume might be fill'd, ſo loudly proclaim the Politicks and Honeſty of Caleb's Degraded Patron, that without doubt he intended his Readers ſhould make his Praiſe of him for Banter.

But on the other Hand we compare the Politicks and Honeſty of the Stateſman in Power with thoſe ſo notorious in his Predeceſſor; Whether we view him gloriouſly maintaining the Cauſe of Liberty and the Succeſſion againſt the Influence of Caleb's Patron, or ſecuring the Freedom, the Laws, the Religion of his Country, aſſiduouſly and faithfully diſcharging his Duty to his Prince ſince he has been inveſted with Power; I care not whether we examine his Conduct in a Private or Publick Station and ſet it in the Balance, the Trial muſt neceſſarily terminate to his Honour as it will redound to the Diſhonour of Caleb and his Proteus of a Patron. 'None, ſaid Diogenes to one that ſlander'd him, will believe you when you ſpeak ill of me, no more than they would believe me if I ſhould ſpeak well of you.' How applicable this Saying of the Cynick's is to Mr. D'Anvers in the following Paragraph which led me to an Examen of the aforeſaid Character I leave to thoſe that have the leaſt Senſe of Truth and Candour, or the leaſt Knowledge of Tranſactions ſince the Trial of Sacheverel.

'Theſe ſcandalous Writers, meaning thoſe on the Side of the Government, were not contented to ſtop there; for no ſooner was this Noble Earl (M—h—t) come out upon a Tour to France, in Company with ſeveral Honourable Gentlemen (Sir W—— W—— and Mr. C——d) in order perhaps to relieve the Anguiſh of his Mind upon the Loſs of ſo great and kind a Father, but they publiſh'd an infamous Reflection upon all Three of them, for no other Reaſon but becauſe it is probable they intended to pay a Viſit to a Noble Friend (a LATE Noble it ſhould ſeem who is allow'd on all Hands to be a much abler Politician and I verily believe as honeſt a Man, at leaſt, their Patron, whatever Pains have been taken to blacken one and vilify the other.'

'Truth, they ſay, is a ſhort-liv'd Madneſs, which, while it laſts, as ſurely deprives Man of the Uſe of his Reaſon, as any other Species of the Diſtemper. Here we find the Obſervation verify'd: For unleſs he had loſt all Uſe of his Reaſon, he never would have put off the Vizor of Patriotiſm as he does here, in order to be believing a Man, proſcribed his Country for the moſt heinous Crimes a Subject could be guilty of, and declar'd at the Requeſt of an Ally, to be as Honeſt, as wiſe as Virtuous, as a Miniſter, who, far from ever acting againſt the Laws of his Country, has been remarkably ſteady in an inviolable Attachment to the Conſtitution in Church and State. But Men in Paſſion as in Liquor will out with the Truth, and Art ſubſides with Reaſon. Caleb's Principles were always the ſame with the late Miniſter's, and all his Shew of Loyalty to the preſent Royal Family and Zeal for the preſent Conſtitution was mere Farce and Inſolence. The Proof is here undeniable under his own Hand.

One would imagine, that ſo conſummate an Adept as Caleb in Art and Diſſimulation, muſt have had ſome very extraordinary Inſult offer'd either to himſelf or his Patrons, when he could be provok'd thus to let fall the Mask before the Schemes of his Party were full ripe. 'The ſcandalous, wretched Scribblers in 'the Gazetteer, ſays he, having preſum'd to attack 'the private Characters of ſeveral Perſons of great Worth 'and Honour with all the Virulence that Malice could 'suggeſt, or Falſhood invent, I ſhall ſtep a little out of 'my Way this Week, to reprimand the Scoundrels.'—A polite Phraſe for a Writer that ſets up for a national Cenſor. According to this cool, genteel Author, a Man that writes in Defence of the Conſtitution in Church and State, is a ſcandalous, wretched Scribbler, a Scoundrel; but he that attacks it often openly, always indirectly, is a Man of Honour, a Babe of Grace. 'Tis happy that we have the Publick for Judge, whoſe Determinations are always founded in Candour and Equity.

The Charge brought by Mr. D'Anvers in this Journal, againſt the Writers in the Gazetteer, is attacking the private Characters of ſeveral Perſons of great Worth and Honour, with Virulence, Malice, &c. To judge of the Weight and Truth of this Accuſation it will be neceſſary to ſet before the impartial Reader the very Words upon which 'tis founded. '* We hear, that 'Sir William Wyndham, in Company with the Rt. 'Hon. the Lord Marchmont and William Chetwynd, Eſq; commonly call'd Oroonoko Chetwynd, 'are gone to France to pay a Viſit to the late Lord 'Bolingbroke.'

I confeſs myſelf ſo groſsly ſtupid as not to be able to perceive in this Article of Home-News, that virulent and malicious Attack upon private Characters, &c. which the ſagacious Squire is pleas'd to charge upon the Writers in this Paper. What the News-writer intended by the Word Oroonoko, I dont know; nor whether there be any Gentleman known by that Nick-name; but ſure I am, that whether there be or no, the Addition of the Word Oroonoko could not equitably be conſtrued into a virulent Attack upon private Characters, &c and therefore could not be the genuine Motive which drew Mr. D'Anvers's Reſentment upon all the Writers in this Paper indiſcriminately. We are therefore to ſeek for the Cauſe in ſome other Words of the aforeſaid Article of News; and as there could not poſſibly be any Exception taken to the firſt Part of it, which was only a Publication of a Matter of Fact, that is, that ſuch a Nobleman and ſuch Gentlemen were gone to France, we muſt ſuppoſe, that the virulent and malicious Attack is couch'd in the latter Part only, viz. 'to pay a Viſit to the late Lord Bolingbroke.'

Mr. D'Anvers himſelf fully juſtifies this Suppoſition, when he ſays 'They (the Writers in this Paper) pub-'liſh'd an infamous Reflection upon all three of them, 'for no other Reaſon than becauſe it is probable, that 'they intended to pay a Viſit to a Noble Friend,' &c — 'Tis hard to gueſs why Mr. D'Anvers ſhould loſe all Patience and be quite out of Temper, for the Publication of a Deſign, which he himſelf owns to have been probable; and 'tis ſtill more puzzling, to know why he ſhould think it an infamous Reflection upon the three Travellers, to ſay, it was heard that they went to France to pay a Viſit to the late Lord Bolingbroke.

If the late Lord Bolingbroke be that very honeſt Man he is here repreſented by Mr. D'Anvers; if he be that virtuous Politician, and ſteady ſincere Friend to our Conſtitution in Church and State, he would paint him to be, why are we told that 'tis an infamous Reflection upon the Characters of three Gentlemen, to ſay that they intended to pay him a Viſit? As it is laudable, far from criminal, to viſit and comfort the Worthy and Honeſt, tho' under Misfortunes, it could be no Reflection to viſit this Noble Friend, if he anſwer the Character of worthy and honeſt. But if, on the contrary, this Noble Friend be of quite a different Character, I am not entirely clear, whether it may not be a Reflection upon the Characters of thoſe who would be deem'd Patriots, to ſay that they went purpoſely to France to viſit him. The Infamy of the Reflection then reſts entirely on the Character of the Perſon viſited: If it be virtuous, as Mr. D'Anvers will have it to be, the Infamy of the Reflection vaniſhes; but if it is quite otherwiſe, as all the reſt of the World are of Opinion it is, who is guilty of the moſt infamous Reflection, the News-writer who related it as a mere Matter of Fact, without any Comment or Obſervation upon it at all, or this poor crazy Scribbler, who calls himſelf Mr. D'Anvers, who ſays the Noble Perſon might go to pay a Viſit to the late Lord Bolingbroke, to relieve the Anguiſh of his Mind for the Loſs of his Father I dare ſay the Noble Perſon wont thank Mr. D'Anvers for this Apology, or take him to be his Advocate for the future.

Cadiz, April 19. N. S. By the Regiſter Ship that arrived lately at Lages from the Havanna, we hear that five Engliſh Men of War had ſo block'd up the latter that no Ship could go in or out; but that the Wind changing to the North Weſt, and becoming very tempeſtuous, they were obliged to retire, when two of thoſe Ships were drove upon the Rocks, and their Crews loſt. We hear that the Squadron which ſail'd from hence, met with ſuch a violent Storm in its Paſſage to Galicia, that one of the Ships was very much damaged, and obliged to go the Port of Ferrol to refit. The Captains of ſeveral Ships arrived here ſay that Admiral Haddock is ſtill cruiſing with Part of his Squadron upon the Coaſt of Catalonia, ſo that it was impoſſible to tranſport the reſt of the Troops and Ammunition to Majorca.

Berlin, May 10. N. S. The King has again had another slight Relapse, whereupon his Majesty's Physicians have thought fit to advise him to fatigue himself little as possible, the rather because the Weather still continues very severe, so that such a backward Spring was never known in these Parts; and there is nothing but Misery to be seen in the Country, where Numbers of Cattle die for Want of Forage. The King will shortly name a Person to go to Cassel to compliment Prince Frederick the Son of Prince William of Hesse upon his Marriage with Princess Mary fourth Daughter of the King of Great Britain. The Report is reviv'd of a Marriage on the Carpet between Prince Augustus William, his Prussian Majesty's second Son, and Princess Louisa, his Britannick Majesty's youngest Daughter: And 'tis even said, that a Minister will shortly set out from the King for London upon this very Account, with the Character of his Majesty's Envoy Extraordinary.
